

attached to necklace do not meet the definition of associated funerary objects at 25 U.S.C. 3001 (3)(A).

The necklace was examined by Bridget Ambler, an archeologist at the Colorado Historical Society. Ms. Ambler identified the teeth as more likely than not being from a Native American individual, probably of Puebloan ancestry. Comparison of the necklace to documentation of Puebloan ruins in the area of Prescott, AZ, led Ms. Ambler to conclude that it is likely to be associated with the Prescott culture and to date to the Pueblo II period (A.D. 1100 to 1200). Ms. Ambler also concluded that a member of the Prescott culture owned and perhaps assembled the necklace.

Yavapai oral tradition indicates a possible cultural affiliation with the prehistoric Prescott culture. Some scholars believe that the Prescott culture was ancestral to modern-day Yuman speaking Yavapai, Havasupai, and other groups, but this belief is not accepted by most archeologists. Hopi oral tradition also indicates a possible cultural affiliation with the Prescott culture.

The placement of human teeth on a necklace is not a commonly observed funerary practice in the ancient Southwest. It may be reasonable to presume that the use of teeth on the necklace occurred in the context of warfare and that the teeth originated from a member of a Puebloan group that engaged in conflict with the Prescott culture. Pueblo of Laguna representative Paul Pino indicated that the Lagunas would never allow a necklace to be made out of human teeth. Mr. Pino agreed that the necklace could well have been produced by a member of the Prescott culture as a trophy to hold teeth taken from a slain enemy from a neighboring Puebloan community. Pueblo oral traditions and archeological evidence indicate that ancient Puebloan societies have a relationship of shared group identity with 21 modern Pueblo communities.

Officials of the Denver Art Museum have determined that, pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001 (9–10), the human remains described above represent the physical remains of one individual of Native American ancestry. Officials of the Denver Art Museum also have determined that, pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001 (2), there is a relationship of shared group identity that can be reasonably traced between the Native American human remains and the Hopi Tribe of Arizona; Pueblo of Acoma, New Mexico; Pueblo of Cochiti, New Mexico; Pueblo of Isleta, New Mexico; Pueblo of Jemez, New Mexico; Pueblo of Laguna, New Mexico; Pueblo of Nambe, New Mexico; Pueblo of Picuris, New Mexico;

Notice of Inventory Completion: Illinois State Museum, Springfield, IL

AGENCY: National Park Service, Interior.

ACTION: Notice.

Notice is here given in accordance with the Native American Graves Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA), 25 U.S.C. 3003, of the completion of an inventory of human remains in the possession of Illinois State Museum, Springfield, IL. The human remains were removed from Montana.

This notice is published as part of the National Park Service's administrative responsibilities under NAGPRA, 25 U.S.C. 3003 (d)(3). The determinations within this notice are the sole responsibility of the museum, institution, or Federal agency that has control of the Native American human remains. The National Park Service is not responsible for the determinations within this notice.

A detailed assessment of the human remains was made by Illinois State Museum professional staff in consultation with representatives of the Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma and the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, Montana.

In the late 1960s, human remains representing one individual were removed from an unspecified site in Montana by Dr. Ronald Gordon. The human remains were reportedly removed from a road embankment which cut through a known Indian cemetery. Markings believed to have been made by Dr. Gordon on the frontal bone of the skull read "Cheyenne ♀ Montana." Prior to 1987, Dr. Gordon donated the human remains to the Dickson Mounds Museum, a branch of the Illinois State Museum. The accession card indicates that the remains are of a Cheyenne female. No known individual was identified. No associated funerary objects are present.

Review of the cranial morphology indicates that the individual is clearly Native American. The Cheyenne Indians are represented by two present-day Indian tribes, the Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes of Oklahoma and the Northern Cheyenne Tribe of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, Montana.

Officials of the Illinois State Museum have determined that, pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 3001 (9–10), the human remains described above represent the physical remains of one individual of Native American ancestry.
