SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: Under the PRA (44 U.S.C. 3501-3520), Federal agencies must obtain approval from OMB for each collection of information they conduct or sponsor. "Collection of information" is defined in 44 U.S.C. 3502(3) and 5 CFR 1320.3(c) to include agency requests or requirements that members of the public submit reports, keep records, or provide information to a third party.

The OCC is proposing to extend OMB approval of this collection for three years:

Title: Electronic Operations.

OMB Control No.: 1557-0301.

Frequency of Response: On occasion.

Affected Public: Business or other for-profit.

Number of Respondents: 15.

Burden per Respondent: 2 hours.

Total Burden: 30 hours.

Description: Twelve CFR part 155 provides that Federal savings associations (FSAs) may use, or participate with others to use, electronic means or facilities to perform any function, or provide any product or service, as part of an authorized activity. Electronic means or facilities include, but are not limited to, automated teller machines, automated loan machines, personal computers, the Internet, the World Wide Web, telephones, and other similar electronic devices. The regulation requires each FSA to notify the OCC at least 30 days before establishing a transactional Web site. A transactional Web site is an Internet site that enables users to conduct financial transactions such as accessing an account, obtaining an account balance, transferring funds, processing bill payments, opening an account, applying for or obtaining a loan, or purchasing other authorized products or services. FSAs that present supervisory or compliance concerns may be subject to additional procedural requirements.

This information collection facilitates the OCC's ability to identify industry technology trends and better understand emerging technologies. The information is collected on a transactional basis and is used to ensure that safety and soundness requirements are being met.

On July 28, 2014, OCC issued a notice for 60 days of comment concerning this collection. 79 FR 42823. One comment was received.

One commenter asked whether the collection of information is necessary for the proper performance of the OCC's functions, including whether the information has practical utility.

The commenter described the collection as an "anachronism" that "no longer reflects the realities and risks of current times." The commenter further noted that the Internet has been widely used as a channel for offering and conducting banking services for many years and that the OCC likewise has many years of supervisory experience with "transactional Web sites," which would seem to obviate the continued need for notice and collection of this information. Finally, the commenter stated that the information collection is not an effective way of understanding industry trends and emerging technologies, contending that FSAs as a group "tend to be slow adopters of new technology" and noting that national banks are not subject to a similar requirement.

The OCC appreciates the commenter's perspective. In response, the OCC will give careful consideration to the comment in connection with the OCC's national bank and FSA rule integration efforts, in particular whether a notice requirement is still necessary for transactional Web sites.

Comments continue to be solicited on:

(a) Whether the collections of information are necessary for the proper performance of the OCC's functions, including whether the information has practical utility;

(b) The accuracy of the OCC's estimates of the burden of the information collections, including the validity of the methodology and assumptions used;

(c) Ways to enhance the quality, utility, and clarity of the information to be collected; and

(d) Ways to minimize the burden of information collections on respondents, including through the use of automated collection techniques or other forms of information technology.
