Announcement of Requirements and Registration for the Open Science Prize

Authority: 15 U.S.C. 3719

Award Approving Official: Philip E. Bourne, Associate Director, NIH OD.

SUMMARY: The National Institutes of Health (NIH) Office of the Associate

Director for Data Science (ADDS) announces a collaboration with the Wellcome Trust (WT) and the Howard Hughes Medical Institute (HHMI) to launch the “Open Science Prize” (the “Challenge”) to encourage and support the prototyping and development of services, tools and/or platforms that enable open content—including publications, datasets, code and other research outputs—to be discovered, accessed and re-used in ways that will advance research, spark innovation, and generate new societal benefits. The Challenge is necessary to accelerate the field of “open” biomedical research beyond what current funding mechanisms can achieve. For the NIH, this Challenge is being launched under the America COMPETES Reauthorization Act of 2010.

DATES:

February 29, 2016: Phase I submissions due

April 30, 2016: Announce Phase I winners; Phase II begins

December 1, 2016: Phase II submissions due

February 28, 2017: Phase II winner announced

The NIH will announce any changes to the timeline by amending this Federal Register notice.

ADDRESSES: To register for this Challenge, Challenge participants may access the registration on the Challenge Web site (www.openscienceprize.org). Access to this Web site may also be found by searching the www.challenge.gov site for the “Open Science Prize.”

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

Subject of Challenge

In order to stimulate innovation, the National Institutes of Health (NIH) Office of the Associate Director for Data Science (ADDS), in conjunction with Challenge Partners, the Wellcome Trust (WT) and the Howard Hughes Medical Institute (HHMI), is launching the “Open Science Prize” (the “Challenge”); a prize competition to inspire the prototyping and development of services, tools, or platforms that enable open content—including publications, datasets, code and other research outputs—to be discovered, accessed and re-used in ways that will advance research, spark innovation and generate new societal benefits. The NIH is using the America Creating Opportunities to Meaningfully Promote Excellence in Technology, Education, and Science (COMPETES) Reauthorization Act of 2010 to support this Challenge.

The goal of this Challenge is to stimulate the development of novel and ground-breaking tools and platforms to enable the reuse and repurposing of open digital research objects (e.g. data, publications, other research outputs) relevant to biomedical or health applications. The volume of digital objects for research available to researchers and the wider public is greater now than ever before, and so, consequently, are the opportunities to mine and extract value from existing open content and to generate new discoveries and other societal benefits. A key obstacle in realizing these benefits is the discoverability of open content, and the ability to access and utilize it.

This Challenge provides a new and innovative avenue for developing the best ideas in this arena. Through the Challenge, the NIH, WT, and HHMI hope to encourage novel ideas and innovations that seek to unlock the vast potential benefits of making biomedical/health content and data open and re-useable, to demonstrate the huge potential value of open science approaches, and to generate excitement, momentum, and further investment. This Challenge also encourages international collaborations among technology innovators, health researchers, and biomedical informatics entities to address “Open Science” development. In building partnerships between innovators in the U.S. and abroad, unique resources can be combined and leveraged to facilitate global health research objectives relevant to the mission of the NIH, increase rapid adoption of Open Science research tools across the globe, and enhance the generalizability of data sharing among researchers and practitioners internationally.

The NIH, WT, and HHMI are seeking to utilize the developer challenge model in the area of “Open Science” that is as open, flexible, and interactive as possible, so as to encourage the development of new collaborations as well as new ideas. Solvers are invited to use innovative approaches to develop applications and platforms that integrate, repurpose and/or repackage open digital resources relevant to health and biomedical research. The Challenge is open both to those who have new ideas and require some funding to take it to the prototype stage, and those with initial early-stage prototypes who wish to develop them further for cross-national or international adoption.
